Korean Cultural Center Los Angeles invited 23 American artists based in Los Angeles to introduce different cultures to the Korean community. The show entitled, “Odd Convergences: Steps/Missteps” will begin on April 28, 2018 and last until May 12, 2018. It will explore a range of different spaces that both are visible and invisible to us in our relationships to life and culture.

The title does not just refer to some formal similarities between the artworks in the exhibition, but also to the artists' experimental attitudes that yields to diverse presentations. What provides a common ground to all artists is a constant search for unraveling the world and giving a contemplative account of our relation to it. In examining how and what kind of entities and phenomena affects the perceptions, senses, and the viewing subject's understanding, the artworks embody different stages, methods or processes to express our complex encounters with the world. World and culture are not always apparent to us in our casual interactions with them or may have concealed aspects that not apparent to our consciousness. To go beyond the surface appearances, the artists present their works in a state of constant flux in between what is visible and invisible. At times, with blurred, unstable, fluctuating and vague formats, these works provoke thoughts and senses into a self-questioning search to arrive new ways of recognition or new ways of understanding objects and forms we encounter. In imaginative interrogation, these works create interplay between what is hidden and revealed through reflective materials, accidental marks, mismatched associations, traces, gestures, repetition, erasures, shadow, light and color.
